Welcome to Holy Trinity Church

Colchester's Oldest Building

History

Architectural evidence shows that the church, which stands on the east side of Trinity Street overlying a minor Roman street junction, existed by the 11th century. Parts of the church tower are believed to date to around 1020 (the Anglo-Saxon period) an earlier church building may have existed on the site. In particular, there is a unique pointed Saxon doorway in the west side of the tower. The church contains the burial place of English madrigal composer John Wilbye (d.1638), and William Gilbert (d. 1603) discoverer of electro-magnetism and Physician to Queen Elizabeth I. There are five hatchments (memorial coats of arms) in Holy Trinity Church, which were restored in 1963.

The church was extended in the 14th century, adorned with dripstone carvings, 17th century hatchments and further extended in the Victorian period.

The church was made redundant in 1956 and was converted to a Museum of Rural History in the 1970s. Since 1997, it has been closed to the public but CO1 is working with Colchester Borough Council and English Heritage to restore the Grade 1 listed building as a place of national importance, incorporating a public café, a youth music and arts venue, and a place for communities to meet and be supported.

The CO1 is for the restoration of Holy Trinity Church and to benefit young people in and around Colchester. CO1 aims to provide a safe and environment where teenagers can relax and be supported.

The café is run by employed staff and volunteers, working regularly with organisations such as GO4 Enterprise, whose aims are to provide training, work and ongoing support to young people unable to get employment. CO1 has free WIFI and is a licensed venue for live music.
